

Mother Earth Has a Fever

Since 1880, due to the dominance of fossil fuels as the primary source of energy, Earth's surface temperature has increased about 1.1 degrees Celsius, or around two percent. Doesn't seem like much until we think about what we feel like when our body temperature reaches 100.5 Fahrenheit.

It's Going To Get Worse

Climate science predicts that Mother Earth's fever will rise to the equivalent of a 102.5 Fahrenheit human fever, if we stopped all carbon emissions tomorrow.

(of course, that's not going to happen, by a long shot)

Don't Look UP

What's Happening Now

Vast, uncountable number of species extinctions

Record number, and severity, of weather-related catastrophes

Loss of arable land due to desertification

Collapse of fish populations

Previously populated areas rendered uninhabitable

Climate Migration = Climate refugees

Increasing starvation and food insecurity in the countries that are the very least to blame for the Climate Catastrophe
